I am trying to run it from command line but I keep getting -m32 "uname -m" return x86_64. "gcc -o filename filename.c" It gives me this: -m32 I have googled it and stack overflow have mainly given me how to convert it to 32 bit. I am not trying to convert it. I am just trying to run it to see what happens. A: The problem is that your makefile is set for 32-bit. You need to add --host i686-pc-linux-gnu to add the x86_64 architecture. Something like this: CC=gcc --host=i686-pc-linux-gnu EDIT: Since it's a separate makefile in a project, you need to include the line CFLAGS += -m64 -march=x86-64 -mtune=generic in the makefile of the project. The CFLAGS should be included at the top of the makefile, before the "all" line. Burgers wrote:Hi, I have a question regarding the removal and reclamation of a body that has gone below the surface of earth due to flooding or some other event (I'll try to clarify). The general concept of this type of body removal is more or less agreed upon by the members of this site - basically that it is a hazardous work and you should only consider it a practice if you are very competent. This is a very serious subject and should not be entered into lightly. So my question is this - can such a body be moved to a special bin or container and then lowered into an open grave? The
